Discussion:

How trees help make our growing towns and cities more livable

Trees are remarkable organisms that make our towns and cities better places to live. They provide resources for our health, like clean air and biodiversity. In this talk, we discover a new concept of the urban forest, where our individual actions to protect nature can become a legacy for future generations.

Join our conversation about what we can do within Kitsap to protect and restore our tree canopies, and what might lie ahead for Washington state.
