Water in Local Nature: Working With Its Connectivity

Speaker:

John Williams, Publisher of Salish Magazine

An exploration of the many facets of our local marine and freshwater - as habitat, a transportation medium, a food delivery system, and an important part of the chemical processes of living things. We identify relationships in the ecosystem and see the ecosystem itself as a complex system. This has implications for how we approach managing nature and our impact on it—how do we avoid unintended consequences when we finite humans are making decisions about something that is infinitely complex?
